

I am Tatiana Zapata, a fourth-year part-time student and Ronald H. Brown Scholar at St. John's University School of Law. I was born in Colombia and immigrated with my parents to the U.S. when I was almost four years old. I am a first-generation college and law student. I have been involved with the LALSA at St. John's since my 1L year and served as a Street Law en Español Co-Coordinator for two years hosting legal rights information presentations for Spanish-speakers. This year, I am serving as LALSA's Co-Director of Events. I also co-founded the Environmental Law Society at St. John's Law during my 3L year and serve as this year's Vice President for the organization. I currently work at the State Energy and Environmental Impact Center at NYU School of Law and am also a student member of the NYCBA's Environmental Law Committee and a Region II Representative for the Hispanic National Bar Association's Law Student Division.
